

Lifetimes Are Not Measured in Years

Said the poet in my father
Before he died too young

Startling and changing forever the child
Working silently beside him on that
Never-to-be-forgotten summer afternoon

Near the giant honey locust tree
In that Illinois cornfield.